Dr. Freedman is a Research Professor at the Institute for Social Research at the University of Michigan. She has published extensively on the topics of population aging, disability, and long-term care. She currently serves as co-Principal Investigator of two national panel studies: the National Health and Aging Trends Study (NHATS) and the Panel Study of Income Dynamics (PSID). She is also leading a supplemental study of disability, time use and well-being among older couples in the PSID. Prior to joining the University of Michigan, Dr. Freedman was a Professor at the School of Public Health at the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey. From 2000-2005 she was affiliated with Polisher Research Institute, a private, non-profit gerontological research organization (formerly, Philadelphia Geriatric Center), where she served first as a senior research scientist and then as director. From 1995 to 2000 she was a research scientist at RAND, a nonprofit, nonpartisan policy research organization. She earned her doctorate in Epidemiology from Yale University and master's in Demography from Georgetown University.
